The front panel has a subtle texture and the 'audiolab' logo is visible on the right.

Audiolab 7000A in your living room

7000A integrated stereo amplifier

Take everything that makes the 8000A one of the most popular integrated amps of the last few years. Add a healthy dose of upgraded tech from the flagship 9000A. The result? The new 7000A.

Since its launch in October 2018, Audiolab's 8000A integrated amp has been a consistent best-seller, loaded with critics and loved by its users for its sound of quality and industry-led technology – a clear class leader at £649. Recently, the 8000A was joined by a new flag-bearer integrated amp, the 9000A, using the 8000A's established blueprint and elevating it with every awareness to deliver the epitome of affordable high-end audio – a seamless listening design, build and performance that took any firsts costing twice its £799 price tag.

An octet team to spring, the 8000A and 9000A are joined by the 7000A integrated stereo amplifier. With 88W of 100W, the new 7000A transcends its two siblings in terms of both price and performance, while adding a few tricks of its own. To build upon the same design implemented in the 8000A, retaining the values an amplifier is all the better, heart of any high-performance audio system, just as it has to be decided, a truly versatile integrated amp now needs to cover many bases – digital and analog sources, wireless connectivity for portable devices, a phono stage for playing vinyl, and amplification for headphones as well as speakers. But while the ethos remains the same, every aspect of the 7000A's century, both digital and analogue, has been enhanced to build updated facilities and upgraded performance.
