Feedback Prevention

Acoustic feedback occurs when sound from the PA loudspeaker finds its way back into the performer's microphone when the system is in use. This unwanted audio signal can cause interference, noise, distortion or plainly cause a non-desired and non-expected sound. Pyle PA speakers are designed with more relatively flat response rates to aid in minimizing any type of unwanted feedback.

Factors involved with the elimination of feedback include proper system placement: placing the system well in front of any performer and/or microphone. Audio signal setting end configuration, along with EQ controls, can help fine-tune the overall sound output which can be specific to environment and type of audio generated by the loudspeakers. The shape of the performance area (including performance area, elevation, volume, etc.), the type of instrument being played, and vocals can all have their relative own relative frequencies and unique sound prints which can be uniquely affected and picked up by any microphone.
