Meet Your SmartThings™ Hub

The SmartThings Hub wirelessly connects all of your different sensors so that you can receive messages about what is going on and use your smartphone to remotely control different things in your home or office. Here's how:

It's Open

The SmartThings Hub speaks many different languages. In addition to sending commands between the many SmartThings devices, the Hub can also communicate with ZigBee, Z-Wave, IP, and other wireless protocols.

It Connects to the Internet

Plug the enclosed Ethernet cable into the Hub, and then connect it to your Internet router. This creates a secure connection between the Internet and the SmartThings Cloud

It Communicates Information and Commands

When one of your connected SmartThings or compatible sensor has a message to relay (for instance, if motion is detected or if a door opens), the SmartThings Hub will receive that message from sensor and send it to your phone. It also allows you to send commands back to these devices, and lets the sensors talk to each other (for instance, telling a light to turn on if motion is detected).

Getting Around

The good news is that your SmartThings Hub does all the heavy lifting for you, and it's pretty simple. No buttons to worry about.

A. Power Port

Micro-USB power conection to be used with included adapter and cable.

B. Ethernet Jack

Provides connectivity to the Internet using the included Ethernet cable.

C. Status Light

C. Status Light
Lights to indicate the Hub's status.

Welcome Code

There is an important code on the "Let's Get Started" card that came in the box with your SmartThings Hub. You'll need your code for registration, and it looks like the sample below.

You can find your Welcome Code on the "Let's Get Started" Card in your SmartThings kit.
